MEDTATION OF THE DAY:

Changed by the Mercy of Jesus

O Jesus, how happy I would be if I had been faithful, but alas, often in the evening I am sad because I feel I could have corresponded better with your graces. If I were more united to you, more charitable with my sisters, more humble and more mortified, I would feel less sorrow when I talk with you in prayer. And yet, O my God, very far from becoming discouraged at the sight of my miseries, I come to you with confidence, recalling that those who are well do not need a doctor but the sick do. I beg you, then, to cure me and to pardon me. I will keep in mind, Lord, that the soul to whom you have forgiven more should also love you more than the others! I offer you every beat of my heart as so many acts of love and reparation and I unite them to your infinite merits. I beg you, O my divine bridegroom, to be the restorer of my soul, to act in me despite my resistance; and lastly, I wish to have no other will but yours. Tomorrow, with the help of your grace, I will begin a new life in which each moment will be an act of love and renunciation.

Thus, after coming each evening to the foot of your altar, I will begin for me the unending day of eternity when I will place in your divine heart the struggles of exile! Amen.

The Wisdom of Fulton Sheen

Purity does not begin in the body but in the will. From there it flows outward, cleansing thought, imagination, and finally, the body. Bodily purity is a repercussion or echo of the will. Life is impure only when the will is impure.
