"Sharing the Master's Joy"

The Thought that actions otherwise worthless in themselves could be somehow redemptive, could serve the growth of God's kingdom upon earth because they were undertaken in obedience to his will...sustained me in joy and drove me on to work ever harder to achieve more perfect communion with God and his will... In this subtle insight of the soul touched by God's divine power lies the root of true interior joy. And as long as this vision persists, as long as the soul does not lose sight of this great truth, the inner joy and peace that flow upon it persist through even the saddest and gravest moments of human trial and suffering. Pain and suffering do not thereby cease to exist; the ache and anguish of body and soul do not vanish from man's consciousness. But even they become a means of nourishing this joy, of fostering peace and conformity to God's will, for they are seen as a continuation of Christ's Passion...as purposeful, redemptive, healing acts by which the world is reconciled to the will of the Father...

Consoling as conformity to the will of God may be for the soul, as productive of peace and joy as it may prove, it cannot be gained simply for the asking...For my part, at any rate, I learned it only through the constant practice of prayer, by trying to live always in the presence of God, by trying to see all things as a manifestation of this divine will...I had continuously to learn to accept God's will – not as I wished it to be, not as it might have been, but as it actually was at the moment. And it was through the struggle to do this that spiritual growth and a greater appreciation of his will took place...If I wanted to preserve my interior peace and joy I had to have constant recourse to prayer, to the eyes of faith, to a humility that could make me aware of how little my own efforts meant and how dependent I was upon God's grace even for prayer and faith itself. Father Walter J. Ciszek, S.J.

Father Cizek (†1984) was an American Jesuit missionary convicted of being a "Vatican Spy" in World War Ii. He spent twenty-three years in Soviet prisons.
